New SANDWICH
pulled salmon

$4.99

Our new hot-smoked salmon sandwich is made by using all of the prime meat from each fish – not just the fillets. Served up street-style in a sourdough bun, with green leaf salad, a sting of spicy BBQ glaze and pickled gherkins, it's as sustainable as it is tasty!

Served in the IKEA Restaurant as part of our chilled offer.

At IKEA, design is about much more than how things look. It's about making things better. We call our approach "democratic design". Design that is beautiful and functional is not for the few, it is for the many.

Every year, we visit homes around the world to discover people's needs and dreams so that we can design solutions that make everyday life a little better – for everyone. For children who love to cook, for moms who want to de-clutter, and for girlfriends who enjoy breakfast in bed.

So – will you want to buy some of our products after you've read this catalogue? Hopefully. Will you look at our products a little bit differently now that you know our beliefs on design? We sure hope so.

This year marks our 40th year in Canada. Whether this is your fortieth IKEA Catalogue or your first, enjoy what's inside because it's been made with you in mind.

Expectations can be wonderful. Like when you're little and on your way to your best friend's party. Or when you've just put in those last hours of work before a well-earned vacation.

Life at home is full of expectations too. But some of them are of a different kind. The kind that make things complicated and try to turn you into someone you're not.

Well, this catalogue stands on your side against all the negative expectations. We've tried to create ideas that make life easier and more enjoyable. Ideas for all parts of your home. But we've focused a little bit extra on things that happen around the kitchen. Simply because a lot of people feel pressure when it comes to food.

Most people want to have a good time and enjoy life at home, whether they're cooking or just snoozing on the sofa. If that goes for you too, you're going to have a nice read.

Goodbye expectations. Hello you.

Dining

Meals bring us together, a time to leave the stress of the day behind and connect with what truly matters. We know that's not always the reality, but it's the one we're aiming for. To us, it doesn't matter where, how or what we eat so we're rethinking eating convention. That means creating new spaces to share a bite, elevating a meal for one, or throwing a charmingly imperfect dinner party. The dining space you create is where you celebrate, talk, catch up, make plans, and laugh at bad jokes together – and we hope it's a place you never want to leave.

Imperfect is perfect enough

The “perfect” dinner party doesn’t exist. And it’s a myth that stops many of us from throwing open the doors and inviting people over. Well, it’s time to embrace our inner Italian. Friends, family and neighbours are all invited. Push together the tables, put a handful of cutlery in a jar and grab any seat you can find. This is a family-style dinner where it’s ok to spill – and put your elbows on the table.

The no-rules family dinner

These days, the family dinner is whatever – and wherever – we want it to be. But there’s one thing we can all agree on – that being together is what we care about. A comfy dining spot we never want to leave is where we tell our stories, create memories and throw out the old rules. So eat at the table. Eat under the table. Eat on the sofa. Or eat in a tent. As long as it’s together.

Table for one, please

It's strange that eating alone gets a bad rap, because it's something many of us really enjoy. You can share a meal with quiet and entertaining dining companions – like a magazine, your computer or a favourite TV show. But it doesn't mean dining at a small table. A big one allows you to really spread out on the nights you're alone – and accommodate your more chatty companions when dear friends come over.

The dream dining area

The dining area is where we gather – to share a meal, tell stories and make grand plans. And it's important to get it just the way you want it because the atmosphere helps create these moments – big and small. The table and chairs are based on the style you like and the size you need. Bringing the rest together requires just a few key pieces that create the right mood for merry-making.

Decoration

One piece of décor that's characterful and eye-catching can quickly elevate the dining area. It could be as big as a sideboard or as small as a centrepiece on the table, as long as it expresses a bit of your personality too.

Rug

Dining areas can be stain magnets, but rugs in sisal and wool are best equipped to resist mealtime spills. The size can be bigger than your table so when you pull out the chairs, the rug is still underneath the legs.

Lighting

The best light for the dining area feels like candlelight, helping to create that warm atmosphere. Ceiling lighting that is proportionate to your dining table is key. And so are dimmable bulbs that help to set the mood.

Date-worthy dining for two

When the kids have grown up and moved out, it’s a chance to reconnect – and reinvent how you spend time together. Now every meal is just for two, a mini date where you can sit close and get cozy. You can share a home-cooked meal at the table, coffee in comfy armchairs or breakfast on the floor. It’s up to you. With the room to create these spaces now, everyday dining becomes a bit more intimate.

Share a meal – anywhere

Our meals have migrated – from the dining table to the sofa, floor and desk. These days, a meal with friends or family doesn’t have to happen around a perfectly set table. And it doesn’t even have to include chairs. The days of “have to” are over. Go ahead and eat around a coffee table. Sit on the sofa. Or the floor. Because it doesn’t really matter where we eat – just that we get to be together.

The inspiring and utterly improvisational cooking style of Jonah Reider

This year’s catalogue encourages us all to let go of big expectations in the kitchen. It’s about throwing out the rules and recipes, embracing our imperfections, and getting rid of that voice in our head that tells us we “should” be doing things a certain way. Jonah Reider just happens to be that kind of cook, a kindred spirit who believes, like we do, in bringing fun, ease and confidence back into the kitchen.

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

Jonah Reider has been feted as the “dorm-room chef.” Known for the inventive and intimate supper club meals that he served out of his Columbia University dorm, the wait list attracted thousands. But it’s his relaxed and refreshing approach to cooking that attracts us – and sparks something in us that makes us want to head for the kitchen to just create, no matter what ends up on the plate. Quite simply, Jonah is our culinary spirit animal, a guy who cooks with perceptible skill yet still embraces those little mistakes and imperfections we all make in the kitchen. The 21-year-old’s style is spontaneous, letting the people he’s with, the ingredients he’s found, or even the way he’s feeling in that moment inspire his creations. “Most people cook spontaneously, yet they constantly compare their cooking with that of a very formal, fine restaurant,” Jonah says. “Thankfully you can make excellent food in this spontaneous, messy, social way.” The dinners he hosted at his dorm-room supper club – up until his graduation in May 2016 – were very much built on this philosophy. >>

“I’m always improvising, like if I run out of a spice, or two more people are coming all of a sudden. I’m open to the possibility of things not going how you expect them to.”

It began when he got off the university meal plan and started cooking at home, asking friends to share meals with him. Then word on campus spread, and soon thousands waited patiently to try his low cost, family style meals.

The food Jonah creates is adventurous, confident and charmingly imperfect. You can taste his personality on the plate and the whirling, kinetic energy he pours into each dish. In fact, he never uses recipes, preferring instead to experiment and improvise even if it doesn’t work out quite the way he planned – an approach taken in part from his training as a jazz pianist.

“In jazz, everyone is making mistakes all the time, and you just have to embrace the unexpected,” Jonah says. “I’m always improvising if I run out of a spice or if two more people are coming all of a sudden. Being open to the possibility of things not going how you expect them to is integral to the process of cooking.”

In his mind, it’s those unexpected moments that allow great food – and a great time together – to really happen. He tells the story of a meal where he served guests a beautiful roasted duckling, but then realized – he had no idea how to actually carve a duck. Didn’t matter. He and his guests had a great time hacking away at the duck and figuring it out.

“If something goes wrong in the kitchen, you can let that fluster you and have it derail what you’re making or you can just kind of embrace it and see what happens,” Jonah says. “When the reason people are having a meal together is to connect, then mistakes become fun and nourishing.”

The intimacy he creates between friends and strangers alike is the part of the meal that interests Jonah the most. What leads to great cooking, in his mind, is having a spirit and energy that invites other people in and curates a great atmosphere.

“I think of what I’m doing as creating a social experience mediated by food, instead of being a chef,” Jonah says. “When people come over to eat with me, the point is to not go to a restaurant. It’s to share an experience with people. That experience for the diners is the only important thing.”

Placing the importance on the social part of dining is also his secret for letting go of those big expectations we tend to put on ourselves, with the prevalence of food television programs and social media images.

“Seeing photographs of beautiful, intricate dishes can make people feel shut out of the kitchen,” Jonah says. “But it’s just not true that that is the only manifestation of excellent cooking. A large part of good cooking is a good social environment and an excitement about creating food. That is what is most exciting to me – and to a lot of others, once they realize this.”

After graduation, he plans to expand his dinner beyond the dorm room to bring his quirky and intimate meals to larger audiences at events around the country.

“People are very excited when they see how low key and extremely fun dining can be,” Jonah says. “They realize, wow this is something I can do myself – have friends over and cook incredible food, and turn it into an awesome hangout.” ■

Above | Serving two homemade sorbets with candied parsnip on top.

Kitchen

There is so much cooking inspiration out there these days, and while it encourages us to get into the kitchen it also sets the bar a bit too high. Filtered photos of perfectly plated meals are not the reality – but a home-cooked meal shared with our favourite people can be. So we're offering some ideas that could help take the pressure off. Like making it easier to prepare and cook meals in a small space; refreshing a rental kitchen to make it work for you; or simply creating a space that inspires you to cook like no one's watching.

Cook like no one’s watching

The appeal of cooking for one is all about perception. You could see it as an inspiration-less chore, something you simply have to do. Or you could see the possibilities – because when you’re one, you can literally do whatever you want. Stay in your pyjamas. Sing a cheesy rock anthem in your loudest voice. And cook with gusto, even if things end up on the floor. It’s about customizing a kitchen just for you, one that inspires you to cook like no one’s watching.

A kitchen that moves with you

This is actually a kitchen – with all of the basic tools you need. There’s space for a cooktop for cooking, a mini-fridge for cooling, and a sink for doing the dishes you’d like to forget. There’s no major planning or blueprints. No intricate installation. Just a simple kitchen you can add wherever you need one. So when you’re proudly bearing the badges of youth – a thin wallet and a small space – you can have a functional kitchen that feels like home. And when home moves somewhere else, you can just take it with you.

We talk to lots of people around the world to better understand their real needs at home. Many who lead a young, urban lifestyle told us they want a simple kitchen that's easy to buy, to take home, to install and even – if you're a bit nomadic - to move to your next home. As well as compact and practical, we think that the result looks great, too.

Mise en place

Counter space in the kitchen is a bit like time, travel or love – we always want more of it. But exploring our culinary talents in a small space is made easier with tips from the pros. Chefs organize and arrange their ingredients before cooking to save room and time – a practice the French call "mise en place". Taking just 10 minutes to chop all of your ingredients and then laying out the tools you need makes the cooking part way more fun.

Food lovers of the future

Cooking is a beloved ritual, a rite of passage, and a lifelong skill. It is something many of us teach our children when they get a bit older. But getting kids in the kitchen at a younger age can have benefits you never imagined, from liking a bigger variety of foods (think: veggies) to learning how to eat healthy and improving social relationships. The impact is astounding – and surprisingly simple to make.

Above | The protective sleeve – as well as the child-friendly design – make SMÅBIT safer than an adult knife.

Cooking a meal is about much more than nourishment. It is a gesture of generosity and even love that can be felt and tasted. Introducing kids to favourite family dishes or recipes that have been passed down allows us to share and preserve our cultures – and create some of our strongest memories. But when it comes to the prospect of our little ones interacting with hot pans, knives and boiling water, most parents get more than a little nervous.

“Parents are scared of kids using things like the oven, stovetops and the kettle,” says Bryan Urbick, CEO and President of the Consumer Knowledge Centre, and an author and lecturer on the subjects of children and food. “Kids need to have tools so they can participate themselves and not have parents fearful about their safety. The more tools we have like that, the better.”

Well, IKEA felt the same. Seeing the potential for a lost generation of cooks because of the abundance of processed and fast foods, an IKEA product developer and a technician decided to create a kid-friendly knife. It’s sharp yet safer than an adult knife – and it’s called SMÅBIT.

“If you want your kids to start cooking at an early age, you have nothing for them to use,” says IKEA product developer Lennie Malmgren, a trained chef who has worked in the cooking department for six years. “Everything is oversized. So you give them a butter knife, which is not sharp at all. Then the kids get tired, bored and they don’t want to cook any more.” >>

“We are losing a full generation of people who can cook,” Lennie says. “That is what we wanted to change. We wanted to get children around eight years old interested in cooking.”

Despite being every bit as sharp as an adult version, the SMÅBIT knife has been made safer for tiny hands. It has a non-slip grip, a protective plastic sleeve and a blunt tip. The SMÅBIT collection also includes a peeler with a safer T-shape that allows kids to peel potatoes, carrots and more.

“It’s like having training wheels,” Lennie says. “A knife and peeler are great because it starts by letting kids touch food, cut it, scrape it, peel it and make a mess. It offers positive exposure to food. And parents don’t have to be afraid.”

This very physical and interactive experience with food is more important than most of us realize. Involving children in the cooking process helps make new foods more familiar and less scary. And, it gives kids the one thing that leads to more positive experiences with new food: control.

And control could just be the secret to the Mount Everest of parenting goals: getting kids to like vegetables.

“The knife gives them control over the vegetable,” Bryan says. “It’s all about giving people control and reducing their fear. The more kids control the food preparation, the more they are likely to enjoy the food and ultimately eat better.”

Giving children control over some of the ingredients in the family meal leads to benefits that grow over time. The more kids experience a wide variety of foods without fear, the more varied their diets will be when they’re adults. And variety is something that helps kids’ nutrition for the rest of their lives.

“By not engaging kids in the kitchen, you may be setting their eating habits for life” Bryan says. “It sets children up to be more likely to buy prepared foods and eat out more often. You might also create picky eaters as adults, and picky eaters aren’t very fun to eat with. Food is such an integral part of our lives for physical and social reasons.”

Bryan says he understands the fears parents have, but that with the right support and tools, kids can begin to learn how to prepare food as early as the age of three – when they’ve absorbed much of the world and start to understand concepts.

“If you learn to cook at an early age, you will continue with it,” Lennie says. “It’s like riding a bike or learning a language; if you learn it at an older age it takes so much longer and you might lose interest. And the core of cooking – and the kitchen – is the knife. If you have one and know how to use it, you can basically do anything.” ■

5 rules for parents when cooking with kids (from the kids)

- 1 | Don’t correct us all the time. That just makes us want to run out and never come back.
- 2 | Don’t get mad if we fail. A smart guy once said “we learn from our mistakes.” We believe that guy.
- 3 | Don’t rush us! Learning takes time; try to relax for a minute.
- 4 | It’s ok to get tired or lose interest.
- 5 | And what’s wrong with being messy?! It’s actually more fun that way. You’ll see.

Tidy sink, happy cook

The sink is the messy heart of the kitchen. Most of your prep and cooking happens right around it, making it a magnet for pots, peelings and more. It's a spot that needs some organization to give everything a place of its own. Containers and inserts divide it up so you can use the sink right up until mealtime. And if you just can't handle the dishes right now, it's ok. That cutting board can cover it right up. Nothing to see here.

Set your kitchen free

It often feels as if there are lots of rules and expectations in the kitchen. And it kills the inspiration because you end up designing it to look the way you're told it should – and not like you. Well it's time to liberate your kitchen, and create the space that inspires you. For us, it's a cool and playful cube that divides one room up into four. It is our blank canvas, a place to experiment and be adventurous. Whatever it might be for you, we say go for it. Because if it's your happy place, that's all that matters.

The Swedish kitchen

There is no place that captures the true character and customs of our homeland better than a Swedish kitchen. Many of the things we value most – being close to nature, eating long meals together, and allowing our kids all over the home – guide how Swedes design their kitchens. These inviting and approachable spaces reflect the simplicity of the landscape around us – in materials, in style and in personality. This is how we live, and we’re proud to share it (but not too proud – that’s not Swedish).

Eating what we buy

That pang of guilt we get when throwing away food that’s past its prime is all too real. But if you can’t see it, you can’t eat it. Reimagining the kitchen so it’s designed to reflect how we actually eat can help us waste a lot less food. Simple things – like storing food in transparent containers or putting it on open shelves rather than in deep cupboards – inspires us to cook with what we have, rather than buying more.

Blending up older produce is a nutritious and tasty way to minimize food waste.

Small acts, big change

Most of us are aware of the impact our daily lives can have on the planet, but “being sustainable” can feel like a big job. The thing we often forget, though, is that we’re not supposed to do it alone. The key is finding small ways to do our part. Because when we add up these small acts, that’s when the big change really happens.

Water-saving faucets are an easy way to automatically use up to 40% less water. Changing out regular bulbs for LED versions is also an effortless way to make an impact – and lower your electric bill. And when it comes to recycling, just a few bins will take care of your metal, plastic and food waste.

A better way to store food

A pantry is like having a mini grocery store at home. With a total overview, it's easier to eat more of what you have. But creating one doesn't require a big space. Simply add a curtain to a corner to keep it dark and cool. Inside, food is displayed in glass jars to inspire your next meal, while metal drawers take root vegetables out of the fridge for good. The pantry is an add-on that keeps food fresher longer – and ups your kitchen confidence.

Metal drawers

Metal drawers are the ideal spot to store root vegetables, mimicking the dark and cool conditions they're used to when growing underground. It means your veggies stay fresher for longer.

Glass jars

Using glass jars to preserve tasty foods is sustainable and energy saving. It also keeps your conscience clear because it helps you save food that might otherwise be thrown out.

Shelf labels

Keeping your pantry organized is as simple as adding metal label holders to the front of your shelves. It helps you identify the food you've preserved in jars, and makes it easier to find what you're looking for.

Everywhere we look, food seems to be at the very top of the agenda – or should we say menu. What, how and where we eat is constantly the centre of attention. Food is now about well-being and health, as well as a personal expression. The world has become food obsessed. We're hungry – not only for the food itself, but also for the facts and figures that come with each serving.

It's so much more than meatballs

More and more people are actually reading the info and nutritional charts on packages. It wasn't always like this, but one thing's for sure: our relationship with food has changed, and all of us who produce, cook and serve food – and love and care about how we do so – need to take notice.

At IKEA we ask ourselves: have we kept up with this development? Has the food we serve and the experience we offer changed at the same pace as people's passion, interest and awareness in food? The long and the short of it is: no. We didn't pay enough attention to what people were thinking about the experience. We simply had to start changing.

Today, people's interest in food is considerably higher than ever before – partly because there is such a variety of food. The ingredients and flavours available today certainly inspire more kitchen creativity than we could have dreamed of a few decades back. Many ingredients and dishes that we take for granted today were nowhere to be found in the food landscape of the 1970s and 80s. In Sweden, there was a huge focus on “meat and potatoes” and a global focus on processed food – it was easy and convenient. Few questioned the quality or nutritional value of its content. And with the arrival of the microwave, these ready-made meals became even more popular.

Even though our first restaurant opened in 1959, at our first store in Älmhult, Sweden, it was in this era that the IKEA restaurants came of age. For example, our beloved – and today, iconic – meatballs were launched globally in 1985. And for a long time, the IKEA restaurants stayed in that decade. But now we are moving to offer our customers a stronger feeling of modern Sweden and improving the eating experience in our stores.

Today, the food you're served and the experience you get from a visit to one of our restaurants has a different taste than in previous decades.

Of course, much remains to be done, but we're getting there – one dish at a time. And it's you, all of our customers and restaurant guests, that help us keep our commitment to being responsible, modern, and forward thinking. Over a year's time, we have roughly 640 million visitors that eat, drink or shop, either in our restaurants, bistros or in the IKEA Swedish Food Market.

The good thing about serving so many people the way we do at IKEA is that if something is not right, or not up to customer satisfaction, someone will speak up and make their voice heard. In the past, our

Pulled Salmon Sandwich

4–6 sandwiches

Ingredients:

400 gr hot smoked salmon
(LAX VARMRÖKT 400gr, IKEA product)
½ tbsp BBQ sauce
2 tbsp chopped chives

burger buns
pickled red cabbage

For serving:

pickled cucumber
(GURKA INLAGD, IKEA product)
leafy greens

How to make:

Pulled salmon: Peel off the skin on the hot smoked salmon and pull the salmon meat into smaller pieces into a bowl. Add the BBQ sauce and the chopped chives and mix it gently with your clean hands.

Assemble the sandwich: Cut buns with a sharp knife and open it up. Put a little of the greens on the bottom part of the bread, then the pulled salmon, red cabbage and pickled cucumber. Put the bread top on and serve. Enjoy!

guests have spoken up, and they continue to do so. This is something that we're grateful for – it helps us cook and serve better food. We're not a fancy restaurant with a genius chef who's always right. We're actually the complete opposite of that. Welcoming people into our kitchen and listening to their opinions is the best way that our 16,500 IKEA Food co-workers can ensure a food range that's appealing, delicious, and that people want to enjoy.

It's also making us even more inspired and passionate about food. As we head into the future of food, our commitment means that we really need to know what health and wellness means in terms of our food offering. This is fantastic, but also a great responsibility. We need to be able to tell people where their food comes from, how it's sourced, and what impact it has on the planet.

Every third calorie that is produced in the world goes to waste – a huge amount. 29% of Europe's CO2 footprint comes from the food industry alone. So while we will always serve our beloved meatballs, we now also offer delicious veggie balls, which have a smaller carbon footprint by 30 times. “Swedishness” is an essential part of who are, and to us, this means simple, nourishing food that is seasonally relevant and sustainable.

We are also proud to have the largest offerings of ASC or MSC certified seafood in the world. You can trust that it comes from sustainable and responsible sources.

But through all of these changes, there's one thing that will stay the same at IKEA – and that's the affordable prices for you and your family. So thank YOU for giving us the best cooking lessons. We're looking forward to many more, and to providing you with many more food products with a modern taste of Sweden – honest food for people and the planet. ■

Responsibly sourced

We are committed to only sell and serve seafood from MSC-certified fisheries and ASC-certified farms. For IKEA, responsible seafood sourcing is a natural contribution to our vision of creating a better everyday life for the many.

Eating at IKEA®

Welcome to your IKEA Restaurant – where you can turn up when you like and stay for as long as you want. You can tuck into a tasty breakfast, lunch or dinner – or just grab a quick coffee. The wide menu of Swedish-style dishes and local specials includes plenty of healthy options as well as indulgent treats, so the whole family can enjoy its favourites. And, with prices that are just as tempting, you can satisfy your appetite with little impact on your wallet. Like to try some Swedish specials at home? You can pick up many of the ingredients in the Swedish Food Market before you leave the store.

$6⁹⁹

Swedish Meatballs or Chicken Meatballs with mashed potatoes, vegetables, lingonberry jam and cream sauce.

Probably the most famous of all IKEA products – the traditional Swedish dish that's now enjoyed everywhere.

Healthier meals to tickle your tastebuds

You can always enjoy a healthy, well-balanced meal with great flavours. And you can trust that the ingredients meet high standards of environmental and social responsibility. We want to give you a choice of wholesome and sustainable food at an everyday price.

During the year, we may serve the veggie balls and salmon with other side dishes that are just as delicious.

Relaxing

Each of us has a unique way of doing things – and relaxing is no different. It could be reading a book on your own or watching a film with your partner. Maybe it's working on a passion project or being close to your kids. The living room is where it all takes place – and there's no such thing as one-size-fits-all. There are no rules or blueprints. And nothing you have to have. It's about crafting a space with the right pieces – ones that fit your special brand of relaxing and recharging.

Dress code: sweatpants

Home is the place where we can be ourselves – sweatpants and all. The outside world stays out with their expectations, schedules and dress codes. Inside is all about recharging and relaxing. When we imagine that room, it looks a bit like this. A soft and serene space with our sofa as the hero – a spot so inviting we never want to leave. Yours might look different – and it should. Because it can be whatever you want it to be.

Wall Décor

Creating a gallery wall of your favourite photos and art starts with the frames. Sticking to one or two colours with the same style can offer a look that's clean and timeless. Then hang a few frames at the same height to anchor the arrangement, and add the rest around it. And the most important tip? Be fearless about what you frame – the best gallery walls have a mix of beloved pieces.

Textiles

Picking a scheme of two to three colours in a mix of materials and textures helps create a cohesive, beautiful space. Neutrals bring calm to a room, especially if your furniture and walls are rich in colour. But if the space is more of a blank canvas, then feel free to add a pop of colour – or a few.

Lighting

Placing light sources at different heights around the room can help create a soothing and functional space. In addition to general lighting, task lighting in the form of a reading lamp, and mood lighting from candles or table lamps all work together to create the right feeling for each moment.

Putting your passion first

We all have a passion for something like dancing, sketching, music. But it’s usually relegated to a corner or given a temporary spot in the living room. Well, not anymore. It’s time to shed old conventions about how this room should look, and instead furnish it around your passion. If you want your living room to be a tango club, then do it – fearlessly. The only rule is - there are no rules.

Do you remember the homes of yesteryear? When more people had rooms dedicated to one specific activity – like a dining room for eating, an office for working and a living room for talking with friends or watching television? Of course, not all homes were like this, but there was certainly more of a tendency to keep rooms and the activities that happened in them distinct.

When the sofa is the home

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

Now, more and more people are rethinking how they use the space they have. For the first time in history, more people live in cities than in the countryside. And in less than 20 years, 70% of the world's population will be living in cities. This reality is having an enormous impact on life at home, and downsizing has been one of the biggest changes we've had to adapt to.

Of course, new ways of living require new ways of approaching the product development and design process. At IKEA, we're constantly trying to find smart and versatile solutions to both needs and dreams. It's about providing real solutions without sacrificing personal style and expression.

One of the biggest changes we've noticed in the home? For many, the living room is now a place to eat, drink, relax, socialize – and even a place where friends or family can stay the night.

So we thought we'd tell you about an idea that helps you do all that, in one product. VALLENTUNA is a brand new sofa that's unlike anything we've made before. We also wanted you to meet some of the many passionate IKEA co-workers – from product developers, development suppliers, pattern shop technician, and designers to packaging engineers and people who specialize in product construction – that took VALLENTUNA from a vague idea to an actual product that can help you have a better everyday life at home.

At IKEA we often say that what is easy for the customer to use is often complicated to make. "Our motto for VALLENTUNA was that we should follow the IKEA value of simplicity – make construction, production and customer understanding simple. Really, really simple," says Bartosz Jasinski, product development engineer. "The biggest challenge was that we wanted the sofa to have three distinct functions: sitting, storage and sleeping – all of the needs we could imagine for it."

One of the things that solved many of these challenges was a system of holes that connects the parts. It allowed VALLENTUNA to become a versatile tool, a bit like a Swiss army knife, with many functions and possibilities. "You can build it like an island, have it long so it fits against a wall, or transform it into a bed that doubles as a sitting area," says Lisa Hilland, one of the designers involved. "Your 80x100 centimetre sofa can turn into an 80x200 centimetre bed – which is more comfortable," she says.

"We worked with this sofa for over two years – but it's still you who are going to design it," adds Jerry Svensson, the product developer who led the team at IKEA. "With just eight parts you can build just about anything." Low back or high back? Want an armrest and a back pillow? With a bed or without? Need built-in storage? It's all possible – and the covers, which are either machine washable or coated to be easily wiped clean, even come in both patterns and solid colours. The idea is that customers can create a sofa that's just right for them.

VALLENTUNA sparks creativity and encourages you to build your own sofa – or sofas. Or bed. Or storage solution. VALLENTUNA is made for the living rooms and homes of today. And we think it will stay there for many years to come. ■

"The biggest challenge was that we wanted the sofa to have three distinct functions: sitting, storage and sleeping – all of the needs we could imagine for it."

The 24-hour life of a sofa bed

As many migrate to cities, smaller spaces have become the new dream home. And part of the reason is that small is smart. The sofa bed is the heart of this living room, made for socializing as much as snoozing. When you add a folding table that doubles as a desk, a chair that's also wall décor and a bench, you have plenty of room for a refined, urban tea party with friends. Pinky fingers up.

A curtain that you paint yourself is an inspiring backdrop for play. But it might not go with mom and dad's grown-up aesthetic in the living room. Two curtains can make both sides happy. With a triple-track rail, you can have a beautiful curtain on the outside and a play curtain on the inside that's hidden away until it's time for fun and games again.

It's known that home is what you create, not necessarily what you buy. It's not about the place, but the actions that take place. The person next to you might say, "It's just furniture though, home is where your heart is". We recognize that home, whatever this is to you, has an important place in your life. Therefore, to us, furniture is not just furniture. It facilitates your way of living, and contributes to your unique idea of home. It's there by your side throughout all different stages of life – the planned, and the unexpected. But, the way we live is changing: life becoming more fluid, and the world seemingly smaller. So we're curious: What makes a home a home? We spoke to four individuals for a more personal point of view.

What makes a home a home?

NAME: Anna
WORK: Business Development & Sales
LIVES: Copenhagen, Denmark

Born in Hong Kong with most of her childhood spent in New Zealand, Anna has created a new life for herself in Copenhagen, at a co-living space. In the midst of the hip city, 21 entrepreneurial innovators are sharing four apartments. Together they host dinner parties, organize movie screenings, and discuss everything from life's twists and turns, to business and relationships. It was during a university competition that she first discovered Denmark, and has since travelled back and forth for eight years for what she calls a "recharge". Finally she decided to quit her job as a financial analyst and make the move. Today she works with sales and business development at a start-up that converts clothing sizes for online shops. Although she's travelled a lot, and finds herself more "rooted" nowadays, she describes her dream living situation as being a digital nomad with, not one, but three homes.

What is home for you?

"Home is where the heart is. And for me, it's also family, and now with age, my friends too. For the longest time I would think of New Zealand as my home, but now that my parents live in Hong Kong it's different. Copenhagen is also my home, and I consider these people I share this space with my family, rather than my friends. I've built such close bonds with them, and I know I can rely on them."

What makes a home a home?

"When my inner child can come out." She bursts out smiling as she reminisces about a childhood memory, something she still does as a young adult. "I think, being comfortable with the people around you, that's what makes a home."

Has technology affected your perception of home?

"Absolutely, I video-chat or call my family once or twice every week. I actually message with my brother every day. That makes me feel like we're not that far apart. For me technology has changed everything. Without it I'm not so sure I'd constantly be moving as I have."

If you could bring five things with you, what would they be?

"The network I've built here, the colour orange, because that's the colour of our co-living space", she laughs, "peoples' drive and the work-life balance. Even though the people living here are all entrepreneurs, they really do have a life. I think that's something the Nordic countries do really well. And lastly, my boyfriend! I'm very detached to physical things. I can't say that my room here reflects my personality. I only really go there to sleep." ■

NAME: Mohammed
WORK: Artist & Music Producer
LIVES: Malmö, Sweden

An artist and a music producer, Mohammed (mostly known as Saint, a childhood nickname) was born and raised in Gambia. He came to Malmö, Sweden as a refugee at the age of 15. He describes his first impressions of Malmö as crazy and very foreign, but with a lot of nice people. Today, he's a student at a music high school, well, not your typical student he'd say, and the leader of a music production workshop for refugee kids. When he isn't in school or at work, he's producing music or cooking (or doing both at the same time). Although neither the refugee accommodation, nor the first tiny apartment in the southern part of Malmö felt anything like home, this one, the apartment he's lived in for the past nine months, is beginning to feel like a piece of his own.

What's home for you?

"That's a really good question. I think I'll always refer to Gambia as home, no matter what. Everything feels pretty temporary now, even though I could see myself

"I guess you could say that home is where your mind is at ease. Where you're comfortable. Not worried."

living here for a longer period of time. But you never know. I wouldn't mind moving to another place for a different reason. I've been through so much that I don't mind being disconnected anymore."

What makes a home a home for you?

"Probably the feeling of familiarity. Yeah that's it. To say that music makes my home would be too cliché, but I'll always love music. I mean, I try and incorporate African sounds in my work as much as possible. I know I can recreate the feeling of home anywhere. I'm like a master at that now. When I first moved here, into this apartment, I didn't even buy a mattress. I went to IKEA to buy one and I'm really bad with measurements," he smiles, and tells us about his trip to the big department store, 15 minutes before closing. "So of course we bought the wrong mattress size," he laughs. "So I slept on the couch a lot to begin with, and basically lived in the kitchen. I'd do everything there, chill, eat and record."

Are there things, memories or places that are special to you in relation to your home?

"Umm," he shakes his head before stating, "not really. Even at 'home home', where I'm from in Gambia, I have these blurry visuals of it. Some of them are strange, some made up, and some fairly vivid. It's not just one specific thing; it's a bunch of things. Like when I hear a song that I might've heard, or remember hearing as a kid in my Pop's car, or anywhere else. It'll remind me of that moment. That feeling. Then I'll try to recreate that feeling in some way. I'll try and recreate a moment from home."

Has technology affected your perception of home?

"No, technology has nothing to do with home for me. I mean I use it on a daily basis, but it doesn't change how I perceive home, or how I see what home should be. I get in touch with Gambia through social media, but you can't exactly call. Of course I'd feel differently if I didn't have the access, but for me it's more about experiencing a place and people. I value that more. On social media I'm not actually physically there - I'm just talking."

What five things would you bring with you from home?

"I would say, good memories, most definitely. Nobody wants a bad memory from home. And comfort, of course. I'd absolutely have to take my ramen noodles with me," he laughs out, "and my shades!" He pauses while thinking hard on a fifth thing to bring, before saying: "Music. Everywhere I go." ■

NAME: Ineke
WORK: Entrepreneur & Designer
LIVES: Hilversum, Netherlands

Meet Ineke and her husband, Guido, living with their three kids and four cats in Hilversum, a small town outside of artsy Amsterdam. Ineke, born and raised in a small rural area in central Holland, met Guido while working as an interior stylist for a DIY TV show. Today, she has her own business knitting furniture, and sits on a snack-tasting panel three days out of the week. Eating crisps nine o'clock in the morning is one of many things that seem to add to the pure happiness that Ineke radiates. Guido also has his own business, as a carpenter and plumber. By the looks of their space it's obvious he's nothing short of a handyman.

How long have you been living here?

"About 20 years now. When we first got here it was really depressing, dark and smelly," Ineke frowns, "it was what we could afford, and I remember thinking to myself: Oh my gosh, how am I going to make this a nice place? We stripped the whole house. There was even a time when we were sleeping on the floor," she points to the center of their, now quaint, living room, "and you could actually see the sky. The entire neighbourhood was getting new roofs. We'd lay and watch the stars at night", she chuckles. "We saw potential in being able to create and build a lot of things on our own," Guido says, "I don't want it to be overdressed or perfect. That's why the walls are plastered and not flat." Between the charm of the uneven walls it's obvious that they cherish their space as something self-made. It's also how their idea of home has come together, reflecting their personalities. "I'm really a bit of a collector, I can't bring myself to throw away old stuff", Ineke smiles.

What do you think of when you hear the word "home"?

"Cozy and warm, Ineke answers confidently, "It's a feeling. It's my family, definitely. Although I work a lot, more than anything else I'm a mother. I really love spending time with my kids. That's my thing actually." Guido agrees: "Home is family, and some kind of relief – that feeling like, 'ah, I'm home'."

What makes your home special to you?

"That almost everything is self-made," Guido answers. Ineke nods, "I think it's the relaxed atmosphere. It doesn't have to be neat or perfect. For us it's about lighting the fireplace, pouring a glass of wine and cooking a lot of food – that's home. Everyone is welcome here."

When did you start seeing your home as a part of your life?

"I think when I was living in Amsterdam. I bought a house, and for the first time I realized, that house made me happy. Just being there. Before that, when I was studying, home was just a room where you cook, eat and sleep. That first house had a fireplace and a garden, which was special for me. During that time I also started going to auctions to collect things. It's the first time I really made an effort to make home my own." ■

Below | The family gathered in their kitchen is an important ingredient of home for Ineke and Guido.

"Some people feel stressed because they don't have this classical feeling of home – one that is unmovable, and always the same. But I really think that that is slowly being re-defined. I think the world will benefit from that."

Eric

NAME: Eric
WORK: Business Development & Expansion
LIVES: Copenhagen, Denmark

From one home to another, Eric really embodies the essence of a digital nomad. He has spent most of his life moving around, traveling from one place to the other – France to Sweden, to Canada, Norway, and Sri Lanka. With a Swedish mother and a French father he describes his view on home as a way of life. Today he works at a start-up company that aims to make online second hand trading and upcycling fun and easy. It's been eight months since he moved to Copenhagen, but it only took one week for the co-living space to feel like home.

What's home for you?

"It's a sense of calm. Since I've been traveling a lot, home is where I actually relax. That's the first thing that comes to mind. It's of course my room, my desk, my bed, but it's also how I move around in my life – when I go to the store, when I meet my friends in cafés, or when I go to certain bars that I like. It's a way of being. I moved a lot as a kid, so I think I learned a lot about home by experiencing that. In some sense, I think I also like it. I've also made choices that have forced me to change homes a lot as well."

Has technology affected your perception of home?

"No, not the basic feeling of it. The feeling of a home has stayed the same for me, because I think that home is based on feelings. It has however changed how I live at home, for sure. So I'll be listening to music in different ways, and I'll have access to tools that simplify my life. But then there are certain aspects where I try to keep away from technology, so that I'm able to just have the pure sensation of an experience. An example of this would be cooking. For me it's meditation."

Where do you see yourself in 10 years, is there an ideal home?

"I have an idea of places that I like, but I guess I'm not the typical Swede in that sense that I know exactly the kind of home I want in the future. And I'm not going to give you a "family"-answer. I know I'd want to live in a city, and then have a place that is calm to go to during the weekends. It's more of a dream lifestyle, rather than a home, I guess. It'll still be a feeling for me, maybe a mix between a physical place and my relationships in that place. Now my relationships are spread all out. I'm not sure I will own a home. I know I won't own a car. I'll be carpooling and those kinds of things. I think there might be similar solutions for homes in the future." ■

Organizing

Organizing is a challenge we all share – even the most enthusiastic tidier. And while there is no magic potion that effortlessly arranges your things (we wish there was), we have some easy-to-implement ideas for the life you actually have. Ideas like creating a closet or a home office where there was none. And storage that hides cords or displays your most cherished memories. These are solutions that understand organizing can be a chore – but doesn't make it feel that way.

Stashing the tech

Digital devices are an integral part of our lives. Smart solutions that allow you to effortlessly charge and organize them should be, too. So we came up with a few ideas – like a coffee table with shelves to store devices you’re using. Or TV storage where you can stash or charge the ones you’re not. Instead of floating around, every device has a home of its own – until you’re ready for more digital diversion.

02 BESTÅ
storage combination with doors/drawers
$240

Here are three ideas to help you better manage your tech. Shelves under a coffee table are an out-of-the way place to stash devices you’re still using, but don’t want to have out. Soft drawer inserts can take care of the devices you want to put away. And a lamp with built-in charging and a USB port can top up power on phones or tablets before you fire them up again.

Where work meets play

When your home is your office, a great workspace helps put you in the right frame of mind for your 9-to-5. Getting a professional and sleek office doesn't require another room though – just a corner of your entertainment wall. Integrating a desk with ample room and cabinets that put office essentials at your fingertips make your workday a productive one. And you can't beat the commute home – about three seconds from desk to sofa.

Drawers

Vertically storing things like T-shirts, jeans and sweaters can help you see every garment you have. For the smaller items – like scarves or socks – boxes or dividers give you an orderly overview.

Lighting

You can't wear what you can't see. Illuminating your clothes with sensor or cabinet lighting can make it easier to pick out individual pieces – day and night.

Seasonal

Taking seasonal clothes out of the wardrobe and storing them in boxes can help free up precious room on your rails and shelves for the pieces you're more likely to wear now.

The low-cost dream wardrobe

A big wardrobe that displays our clothes and gives everything a place of its own is a fantasy for many. But big wardrobes come with big price tags, don't they? Not in our world. This is the low-cost dream wardrobe, with many of the features, functions and sophisticated details you've always envisioned. With soft curtains, long rails, show-off shelves and a bit of sparkle, reality just got a lot closer to your dreams.

Bringing home a baby also means bringing home a lot of stuff. And in a small space that can lead to big sacrifice. But adding a nursery in your bedroom doesn’t have to mean giving up your meticulous wardrobes. So we created the nursery wall, a space that maximizes the room you have with individual wardrobes for all, a changing station and a crib. It’s an organized spot where you can change your clothes – and the baby too.

Swedishness has no borders

I didn't know much about the Swedish culture when I applied for a job to work at IKEA in Älmhult, Sweden. But, after five years as a copywriter in "the heart of IKEA," it seems that some Swedishness has rubbed off on me.

Despite moving back to America, I've developed a strong affinity for white walls, unfinished wood, the warmth of tealights, and placing carved Swedish Dala horses on practically every free shelf and windowsill in my home. Light-coloured walls and candles fight the dark winter's never-ending grey weather, which is not unlike Sweden here in Portland, Oregon, while wood makes me feel closer to nature. I blame my long walks in the Swedish forest for that.

But it goes much deeper than home furnishing. If I could sum up Swedishness in one or two words, it would be simplicity. Simplicity as an approach to life. And heart.

It sounds so nice. Almost too nice. But it didn't always make sense to me. In the beginning, I found it strange that, all around Sweden, shops closed at 5 or 6 p.m. during the week and by 2 p.m. on Saturdays (and they didn't even open on Sundays). At first, I wondered why the shop owners didn't want to make money. Then I realized they just valued their time with their families more. It's why parents get 16 months of parental leave when their children are born. Caring for each other is a priority, and it starts right at birth.

At work, people felt more like family than co-workers (and still do). There were no egos. There was no hierarchy. This made working in a corporate environment quite refreshing, but it also meant that decisions were made by committee. In other words, they weren't made very quickly. But everyone worked together, respected each other and had fun. Despite the hard work, people came first. Life came first. You could say the stuff that matters most came first.

I've often reflected on my time working there and wondered if what I experienced was because I was living in Sweden or working at IKEA. The line always seemed blurred to me. Was it the Swedish culture or the IKEA culture?

Last year, a project in the Netherlands helped clarify that for me. I was asked to work on internal communication ideas around IKEA core values at the IKEA head office in Delft. I would be working with a team of Dutch co-workers that I had never met, and I was the only one from outside the office.

Above | While it might not be 100% Swedish to hang advent stars year-round, giving the kids their own spaces to play alongside us definitely is. The HEMNES TV bench is the perfect worktop height for them to "cook" their own masterpieces.

"If I could sum up Swedishness in one or two words, it would be simplicity. Simplicity as an approach to life. And heart."

Ginny Figlar, copywriter

There is some kind of magic that happens when you brainstorm ideas with people you are comfortable with. There is a trust there, and knowing how everyone works helps you get to those hard-to-reach, really good ideas. So I was pretty nervous when I arrived to meet everyone for the first time at the kick-off meeting.

But from the moment we were all together in the same room, I felt an overwhelming sense of familiarity. It was as if I had worked with these people for years. The same things I experienced in Sweden were happening right then and there.

Swedishness was coming to life all around me – it wasn't just about Sweden anymore. It was about values, and values don't have borders. They live inside each of us and thrive on being connected. That way you just click with some people.

That's when I realized – it's IKEA. ■

Below | It's about simplicity and the little things... like these notches that let water drain off when the mug is upside-down in the dishwasher.

Sleeping

The day starts and ends here, among a mess of soft covers and plush pillows. And with a bit of dreaming, it can be elevated beyond a simple place to snooze. It could feel like a hotel in a far-flung city. Or an enveloping space high up in the clouds. It could be a private island for one in a shared room. Or a stylish sanctuary that blends the personalities of two. Whatever mood you create, your bedroom will be a peaceful and personal place to spend way more than just eight hours.

Comfort

Finding the right combination of mattresses, pillows and bedding is the foundation for comfortable and restful sleep. Mattresses and pillows come in a range of firmness and materials to suit every body. Testing out both soft and firm styles will help you determine what’s most comfortable. For duvets, the key is warmth level. Consider the climate you live in and whether you like it cool or warm when you sleep. There’s a duvet with the right filling and warmth rating to suit your needs.

Lighting

The bedroom is a multifunctional room that needs the right lighting to match. Ceiling lamps offer ideal general lighting, while a diverse mix of table and floor lamps help improve the cozy mood. Bedside lighting does this job too, as well as offering functional light that can be directed right where you need it.

Textiles

Soft materials on your bed and windows help create that dreamy bedroom vibe. The bedding part is simple – something soft and stylish will do. Curtains, on the other hand, do a few big jobs – adjusting light and privacy, as well as insulating the room. A great solution that gives you control over all three is combining a blackout blind with a pair of sheer curtains.

A bedroom in disguise

When your bedroom is the living room, carving out a personal and quiet space of your own becomes even more important. This heart of the home is made for everyone, but cleverly hides away the functionality of a bedroom for one. The cabinet is a wardrobe, the screen a changing room, and the couch a comfy bed for sleeping in – as long as you don't mind some company in the morning.

No little sisters allowed

Sometimes adults need their own private space to recharge and relax, and so do kids. Especially when they're sharing a room. The good news is that the right furniture can affordably divide up the room, letting them create their own unique space – without compromising. The only bad news? We can't do anything about sibling rivalry.

Eric
Children's IKEA Shopkeeper, Canada

Two children can comfortably share the same room, as long as you first take care of the sleeping area. Sleep is really important for a child's healthy growth, so they need their own quiet and cozy spaces at bedtime. After that, the room is simple to organize safely when you look at it from the height that the children see.

An oasis for me - and you

In an ideal world, the bathroom would be a private retreat – a place to spend hours indulging in personal primping you don’t want anyone else to see (we’re looking at you, bushy eyebrows). The reality? Most of us have to share – but not if you get creative. Dividing the space to create a secluded section just for you turns a shared bathroom into a “me” bathroom. Is it vain? Maybe. But in this room, we think it’s ok to be a little selfish.

Bathtime gets Zen

The bathroom is the ultimate private space – to energize, relax, heal and pamper. But it’s not just parents who need this quiet time – it’s the little ones too. The warmth of wood and natural materials, as well as a subtle colour scheme creates a Zen-like atmosphere that’s made for bathtime. But no one here acts like a monk. Monks don’t have rubber ducks.

A better conscience bathroom

Most of us are more aware than ever about the importance of reducing our footprint, particularly in the bathroom. But we also don't want to sacrifice those cherished moments of self-care. Well, you don't have to. A few simple acts – like using LED light bulbs or sorting recyclable waste – can help minimize your mark, and allow you to enjoy a hot shower with a good conscience.

Kirsten
Sustainability Specialist, UK

The bathroom is where a lot of our recyclable waste – like plastic bottles and cardboard – tends to pile up and get thrown out with the regular trash. But a simple solution, like this storage bench with a couple of bins, makes it pretty effortless to recycle those items.

What home is for a refugee without one

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

Outside each plastic-panelled shelter, you see pairs of shoes. Many are muddy and dusty, evidence of the long journey taken to get here. They sit lined up outside door after door, a glimpse of the people within – parents, children, aunts and infants, who fled their homes in fear. Taking off your shoes at the door is a familiar custom, one many of us share. And here in a refugee camp, it demonstrates something powerful – a deep respect for the idea of home, however tenuous or temporary.

Above | Cousin Ibrahim*, 17, walks through the door of the family's Better Shelter.

For many refugees fleeing the Syrian civil war – a battle that has raged since 2011 – home is a flat-pack shelter. Initially funded by IKEA Foundation, and designed by Swedish social enterprise Better Shelter in cooperation with the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR), they are one-room units that offer refugees in camps more dignity, safety and privacy than the tents that have been used since World War II. They have four walls, windows, room to stand straight up – and even a lock on the door.

“Moving into a shelter means this might be your home for while, and being able to close a door behind you – and lock it – means so much,” says Märta Terne, the Communications Manager at Better Shelter. “It’s something that a lot of us take for granted – those private moments and the private space you have for yourself.”

“Being able to be alone or with your family inside a controlled space is important, especially for people who have experienced such trauma,” she says. “They need to feel safe, be able to close that door, and just relax for a bit.”

Since 2015, UNHCR has ordered about 15,000 Better Shelters, which have been deployed by the refugee agency in seven countries. But two of those countries – Greece and Iraq – particularly illustrate the ways in which Syrians have responded to the crisis, and how these shelters are housing refugees from just a few days up to many years.

“We consider this our house now”

Most Syrians have escaped to neighbouring countries – like Iraq, Lebanon and Jordan – where a shared culture, language and religion make the transition much easier. Thousands end up in refugee camps, like the ones in the relatively quiet northern Iraqi cities of Erbil and Sulaymaniyah, waiting for the war to end. They live in limbo, with little freedom to move around and no access to jobs or education. And while they wait, they do what any of us would – they make their Better Shelters feel more like home.

“The camps in Iraq are a bit more permanent,” Märta says. “People have had a chance to bring more personal items, and have spent more time decorating the shelter with textiles to make it more personal. They, in a sense, accept that this will be their home for a period of time, and choose to make it cozy.” >>

Better Shelters are designed to house refugees who have fled armed conflict, persecution or natural disaster. They are built with refugees’ unique needs in mind. Better Shelters:

- last 3 years, 6 times longer than a typical refugee tent
- are modular and can be adapted, moving the windows and doors wherever needed
- are illuminated by a solar-powered LED light that also charges mobile phones
- can be locked from the inside or out using a padlock
- offers families a living space of 17.5m².

A few hundred kilometres east of the Syrian border, there are thousands of Better Shelters erected in the two camps here. They are far better than fabric tents, especially when Iraqi winters turn cold. The floors are raised to provide insulation, while the hard plastic walls stop wind and provide privacy.

“Of course, we can’t compare this housing with our real home back in Syria, but there is a huge difference compared to living in a tent,” says Noveldin, a Syrian refugee living in the Kawergosk refugee camp in Erbil, who asked that his last name not be used. “We consider this our house now.”

Outside many of these modular shelters – which can be assembled in just a few hours – you see people cleaning panels, hanging up laundry or tending to the flowerbeds and small fences they have put up to recreate something from home.

“All of these symbolic actions and items really make you feel more at home,” Märta says. “These might be specific to certain families or cultures, but they’re very essential. They take pride in their home, even if it’s not one they chose.”

Safety and security a lock can bring

An estimated 10 per cent of Syrian refugees have chosen a dramatically different path – one that has taken them on a perilous and sometimes deadly journey across the Aegean Sea to Europe. Many ended up in temporary accommodation facilities like Kara Tepe on the Greek island of Lesbos, a place where they can feel secure, and get access to services and protection.

“It is a humbling and awe-inspiring experience,” says Boris Chesherkov, the UNHCR spokesperson on Lesbos. “It’s emotionally taxing for all of us. When you see the level of desperation they felt to take this extremely dangerous journey, you understand that your role has meaning.”

Since 2015, more than a million refugees have transited through Lesbos, an island that has shown tremendous goodwill, compassion and generosity. There are just 86,000 residents, who have welcomed refugees like Anouar* with open arms and open hearts.

A 40-year-old former taxi driver from “Most refugees are not what you see reflected on TV. They’re moms and dads taking their kids across the sea, the ocean and the desert on a very dangerous journey to have a better life.”

Jonathan Spampinato, Communications Manager for IKEA Foundation.

Aleppo, Syria, Anouar fled the city of his birth – and the family home his father built – with his wife, nephew and five children. A rocket fell just blocks from their house, causing part of it to collapse. With Aleppo crumbling around them, they fled through Turkey and onto a smuggler’s boat to Greece. They came with nothing but ID cards and some clothes, unable to salvage anything from their house – no photos, no keepsakes, no record of their lives before.

“When there are no loud sounds, no planes, no shooting, I can make my kids go to sleep,” says Anouar’s wife Amina*. “In Syria when the planes came, the kids woke up and cried and screamed. This was from the war. My kids can sleep here and relax more.”

Refugees are called guests in these camps, a show of respect and support from the local Greek authorities, UNHCR and other organizations that facilitate a range of services. Three meals a day, hygiene items like soap and baby diapers, and a place to charge their mobile phones are all provided. But the Better Shelter is where they spend most of their time.

“Locking the door is excellent,” Amina says. “This is something that makes us feel safe and secure. My kids will not just walk out or something. We care about the personal belongings we have and now we keep them without worry.”

Even though they stay just a short time, they make an effort to carve out personal space for their family – likely the first safe space since their escape.

“They stay for a short time, but they instantly start making it their own home,” Märta says. “They wash their clothes and hang them up outside or inside the shelter. They create a cozy corner with blankets. And you can see shoes outside every shelter because they want to keep it clean. Finding a home and a safe space, even though it’s temporary, is very important.”

This notion of what “home” is for a refugee and how it could be made better was a particularly powerful idea for IKEA Foundation, whose mission is to create better opportunities for children.

“There are currently about 60 million forcibly displaced people in the world, and of that about 50-60 per cent are children,” says Jonathan Spampinato, communications manager for IKEA Foundation. “That’s Canada. Imagine a country the size of Canada filled with children without a safe place to call home, living in a camp somewhere. It’s probably the single greatest need that children have – a place to sleep and a place to live.” ■

IKEA FOUNDATION is the philanthropic arm of INGKA Foundation, the owner of the IKEA Group of companies. The IKEA Foundation aims to improve opportunities for children and youth in some of the world’s poorest communities by focusing on four fundamental areas of a child’s life: a place to call home; a healthy start in life; a quality education; and a sustainable family income. We are also helping these communities fight and cope with climate change. By working with strong strategic partners like UNHCR and Better Shelter, IKEA Foundation can use innovative approaches to achieve large-scale results for children.”

Left | The IKEA 365+ carafe is beautiful, functional, sustainable, long-lasting – and has a price that many can afford. In other words, the perfect IKEA product.

Why good design is democratic

Many people think that design is about the shape of things. But at IKEA, it's so much bigger. It's about making things better. Our vision is to "create a better everyday life for the many people." It's our 'why'. It's a big promise, and to make sure we put it into reality, we have a way of doing things that we call democratic design.

Now, this phrase is not something that we made up to make us look better as a company. It's not a label that we stick on whenever and wherever suitable. Democratic design influences every step of our process, from formulating ideas to our finished furniture, whether that's a sofa, a table, a cooking pot or a drinking glass. Democratic design helps us raise the bar for making better products for more people – better because they're developed with an understanding that people want things that work and make life easier (function), that are beautiful (form), demand value for money (quality), care about the planet (sustainability), and are affordable (low price).

At IKEA, that last dimension – low price – is absolutely key in order to create a better everyday life for the many. We want as many people as possible to enjoy our products in their everyday lives. Why make things for the few if you can make things better that can be enjoyed by the many?

It's not easy, but IKEA has always been about doing things differently. You can see this in our roots and our history, which are closely linked to democratic design. After all, IKEA was founded in southern Sweden, a country where the values of democracy grew strong and spread wide during the 20th century. It was in this spirit and context that IKEA came of age and found its own vision.

Making beautiful things that are expensive is easy. The same goes for sturdy items that are hard to transport and impossible to clean. The challenge is to meet all five dimensions: form, function, quality, sustainability, and low price. It's hard, but thanks to democratic design – and a little bit of stubbornness – it can be done. And it's how we make things better. ■

"It's not easy, but IKEA has always been about doing things differently. You can see this in our roots and our history, which are closely linked to democratic design."

At IKEA, quality comes from the inside. We like working with materials that are more sustainable, more affordable and more enjoyable to use. Well really, “likes” would be an understatement. In fact, we LOVE to get down to the nitty-gritty of natural materials.

The thing about quality

– an interview with Jan Ahlsén

Did you know that it takes about two years to assess a “new” material at IKEA? Together with WWF, we perform a mapping of the material’s sustainability and availability. We never start using a material without doing a proper analysis of potential harm being done to nature and the living creatures around it. On this note, there’s really no one better to talk to about quality and materials other than the material connoisseur himself. Jan Ahlsén, Material & Innovation Specialist, has been with IKEA for nearly 40 years and is nowhere near losing his wit - and passion for natural materials. You could kind of say that it was love at first sight:

“Solid wood is where it all started for me. I was kind of an expert on that once upon a time”, he says with a humble smile. It was by accident I made the switch to bamboo and other natural fibre materials. Now I challenge solid wood,” he winks and chuckles. A tree takes about 70 years to fully grow - light-years compared to the seven years it takes bamboo. “I’ve always had a thing for natural materials. But, it was at IKEA that I fell in love with using materials that take people and planet into consideration.” >>

SINNERLIG stool $59.99. Cork and powder-coated steel. Designer: Ilse Crawford. RA. Ø35, H45cm. 103.057.79

“Many individuals here have influenced me. The values – making more from less – resonate with me, and the way I like working.” Going from being a technician, to a purchaser, to just about a little bit of everything, he still describes his role as continuous growth and development. “It’s the same kind of feeling in my body, he smiles. It never stops being interesting to me.”

Do you have a favourite material? There’s a long pause. He squints upwards and says, “I can’t say I have a specific one favourite, but when I choose materials for myself, it’s always linked to what I do here at IKEA. I had a good learning experience together with Ilse Crawford, during the development of the SINNERLIG collection, about tactility and feeling – the relationship that we as humans have to material. And darn it, she’s quite good at that. I think many of our customers link their perception of quality at IKEA with the assembly of our products. But I believe we all have this sense for materials. Just go look at people shopping for clothes. The first thing they do - they’re touching the material. If it feels good, like what you expect it to feel like, then oh wow, it’s a different quality.” He chuckles, and talks about how he went to visit a store in Älmhult to observe peoples’ shopping habits.

What is quality to you?

“Quality is about form and function. It’s about fulfilling my expectations, that the furniture works as I expect it to work when I use it. Quality is free. Quality itself doesn’t cost anything. It’s the errors that cost IKEA and the consumer money. When it’s incorrectly made, then it starts costing money. And back to function – if I should drive a car in the Sahara desert, and I have a choice between an ordinary SUV and a luxury car, which one do you think would fit best? A higher price doesn’t necessarily reinvent quality either.”

In terms of quality, what’s important for people to look for when purchasing furniture?

“It’s a lot about where you are in life. If I’m married and have small kids, then of course I would buy a table with a melamine surface. I think we should help the customer with this. We need to tell them if they have kids who sit and hammer with toys, and their breakfast is all over the place, then there, that’s the table for them. But it can also be twisted around. A couple of years back IKEA sold a dining table in solid pine, with no surface treatment on it. I had it at home, with small kids at the time. It looked terrible after a couple of weeks with marks and scratches everywhere. One year later it was beautiful. Every mark was like a memory. My table became my history book. This is of course if you’re prepared to do some maintenance over time.”

How is IKEA utilizing natural materials in the near future?

“IKEA is a fantastic company because we dare to do things differently. If you look ahead to 2020, 2030, we know already that we’ll use a lot more material. There’s a limit to some materials, but we’re also aware of materials that don’t have those same limitations. Bamboo for example, you plant it, seven years later you can harvest it, without having to replant it. The roots take care of that. Extremely sustainable material, right? So, why don’t we do more? I can mention cork as well. We only “borrow” the bark, we never cut down the trees.”

“We’re also very aware of the waste that is being generated in the process, and have a lot of initiatives around this today. Going forward, we’ll take care of bamboo waste by mixing it together with other natural materials. This turns into something that looks a lot like ceramic,” Jan points to his coffee cup on the table in front of us. “Technically it’s all there, now we just need to make it happen! I think there’s a lot of promise there, even from a customer perspective, and IKEA is very much at the forefront of this.”

According to Jan, rattan and paper are two other materials to keep an eye on in the future. They’re great to use for storage because it allows items to breathe and, as Jan expresses: “That gives us a warmer feeling at home.”

What do you think future IKEA furniture will look like?

“I think we’ll try to incorporate natural fibres into our self-assembly products a lot more. They can be used in bookshelves, kitchens and bathrooms to give a warmer feeling. The surface treatment will remain as is, because it serves as good function. By having the natural fibres in there, it speaks to my heart.”

“For me, the future is about handicraft. You can go to IKEA and buy a rattan chair that’s handmade. A human being has made it. That’s amazing! So actually – it’s a work of art. We might not think about it, but we have a lot of works of art at IKEA. That’s one thing I hope we will be able to tell the customer more about that. My dream is to have a tag on the product with a QR code that can show a short movie about the person that wove the chair. It’s about storytelling. It’s human.” ■

Our passion is to make things better. However, we don't just innovate for the sake of innovation. We innovate towards a brighter future. Which sometimes also results in asking unusual questions. Like, could we make furniture out of the same material used to make an egg carton? Or, can recycled, low cost paper pulp have a role beyond product packaging? Actually, that's exactly what we asked ourselves, and so the exploration of paper-made furniture began. Yes really, paper.

Furniture made out of paper. Really?

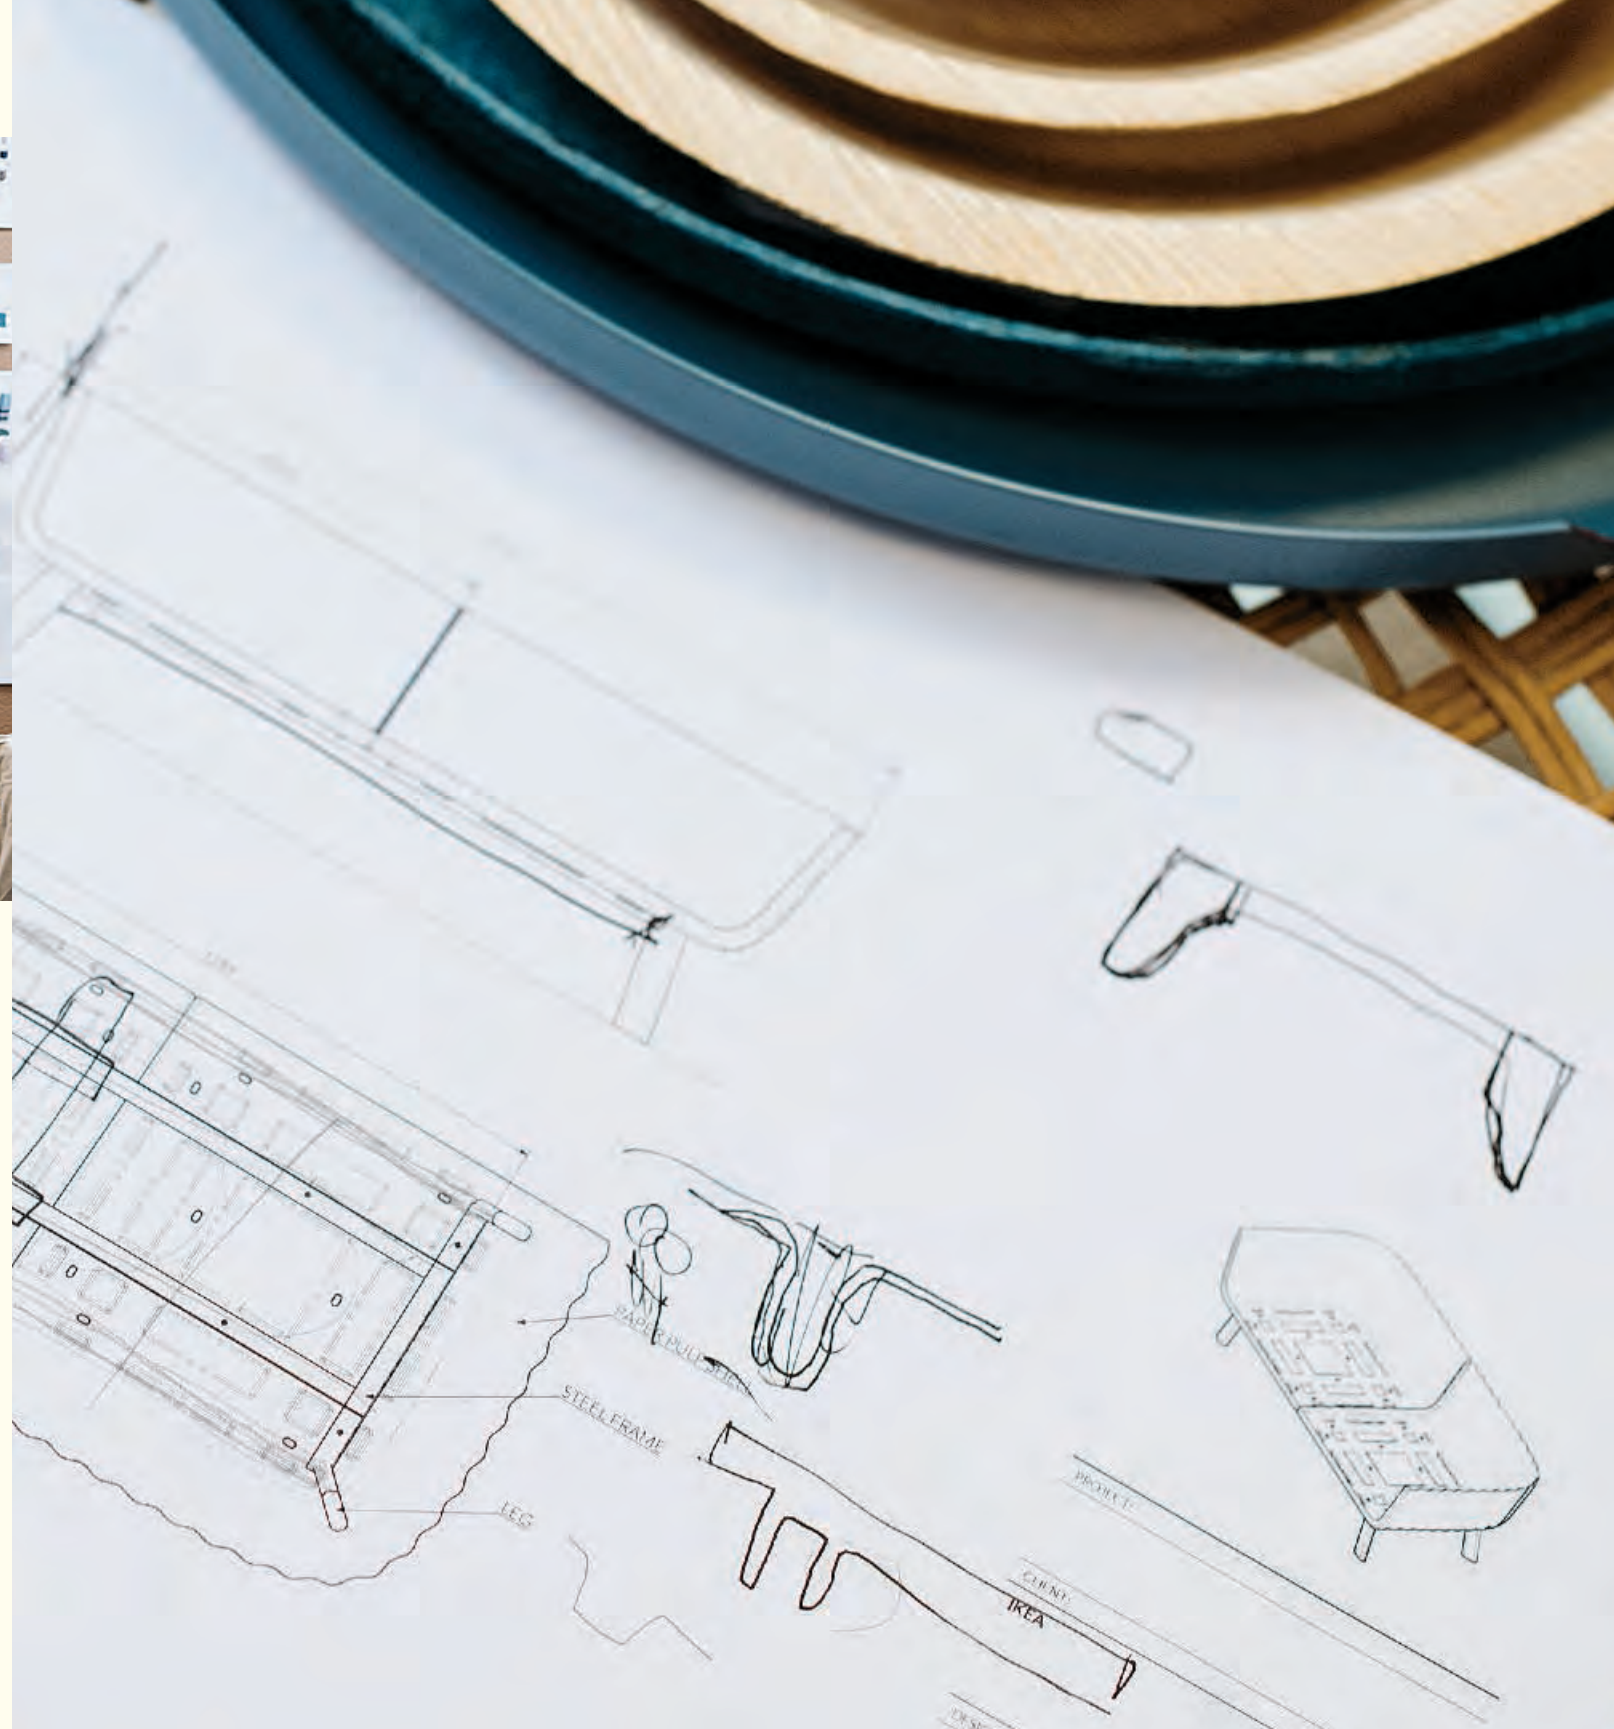

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

From one country to the next, an IKEA design team travelled around the world to visit factories and suppliers for fresh inspiration and knowledge. The road from idea to prototype is not always a straightforward one – the entire paper industry is built upon deeply rooted traditions. “They think you’re a little crazy – what you might think is beautiful, somebody else will say is impossible. It’s really important to stay curious,” Designer, Hanna Dalrot smiles. The team describes it as a highly collaborative process: “One thing is for sure: they understand the value of paper and its ability to be renewed. They know that there’s a worth to the things that people dispose of.”, Michael Nikolic, Creative Leader explains. >>

Above | Creative Leader, Michael Nikolic, holding items traditionally known in the paper industry, like the egg carton – where the innovation and journey for IKEA really began.

Staying environmentally conscious was the focal point for the design team. “The paper industry takes care of a lot of waste. So we thought, instead of producing packaging, which is eventually thrown away, recycled or re-produced into a new package, why not create something aesthetic out of this? That’s when IKEA is at its best – when we do things differently” Nikolic continues. Today, nine different materials have been chosen; paper being the base of it all. “It’s a wonderful material and there are multiple ways to apply it, but even so, it’s also quite complex.”

Paper pulp, one of the team’s main discoveries, is basically recyclable paper turned into a pulp and placed into a mould. Once moulded, it becomes a hard shell based on the choice of thickness and design. This process works similarly to the way other traditional materials are cast or moulded, such as ceramic, plastic or metal. But it’s paper. The lengths of its fibres, together with the amount of glue, determine the hardness and quality of the final product. Other additives can create additional attributes, like making it water-repellant or giving it a colour. In the end, the team strived to develop structural and stylish products that can also be decomposed. Designer Maja Ganszyniec refers to her father, who recently threw away his old sofa: “It took him almost two days to sort the materials for recycling. Who has two days to dismantle a sofa? No one. So most of us will just chuck the whole thing away, and that’s not good for the environment. That’s why it’s important for us to design these products in a way that’s easy for you to take them apart and separate the materials once the lifetime of the product

“We work towards making something better in the future. For me it’s about impacting people’s lives for the better, and hopefully solving new problems along the way. Although we aren’t there yet, the best is yet to come.”

Michael Nikolic, Creative Leader

Below | Designer Hanna Dalrot found that working with paper had many unimaginable possibilities. Moulding these different coloured plant pots was just one of many.

Right | Creative Leader, Michael Nikolic, together with designers Hanna Dalrot and Maja Ganszyniec in their “paper space” at the IKEA headquarters.

has run out. Only then can you properly recycle it. A paper sofa follows this logic. It’s not about the paper itself, it’s about people being conscious buyers. I think IKEA has a responsibility to create products that are speakers of this. There’s this magic moment when you come to a factory and they resist change at first, and then after a while get very excited and involved. That’s when the magic happens.”

Paper pulp, paper clay, paper glue, paper cotton and washable paper – the possibilities feel endless! These applications of paper are consistently being tested and developed into something we’d normally expect to be turned into a magazine, a milk carton, or yet another package. With a ton of ideas, tests and discoveries yet to be made, one big question still remains: will there be IKEA furniture made out of paper? The answer: the best is yet to come. No one knows quite yet how it will end. “Since it’s such a new way of working with this material, and has never been done at this scale of production before, it’s a very daring project. It depends on so many different details – the composition of the material, the thickness, and the construction of the shell. We have to regulate three or four aspects at the same time. So of course it’s a journey.” Maja says. So at IKEA, staying relentlessly curious can in fact be a good thing. If we stop questioning our approach or products, we only keep creating what’s already been done. We always want to aim for something original, something conscious, something bold – something better for you – like furniture, made out of paper. ■

“I prefer to keep the imperfections of handicraft visible. So even though a product is mass-produced I think it’s beautiful that not each and every one will look the same, or have the same exact shade of colour.”

Hanna Dalrot, Designer

Stubbornness is a virtue

Tell a small child not to smile, and it's one of the surest ways to inspire a toothy grin. Tell an IKEA co-worker who studied weaving and textile technology that he's not capable of weaving a rug on an old Punja loom, and he'll never stop trying to completely re-engineer it so he, and many others, easily can.

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

That's the short version of what happened when Pankaj Date, a business developer at IKEA India, was asked to accompany the team to tour an IKEA supplier's rug weaving centre. Curious about the unique type of hand-weaving done on the Punja loom, he asked the weavers if he could take a seat and try it.

"I remember sitting on that loom trying to weave, and I couldn't do it. It was odd. Within 10 minutes, I started sweating. I felt frustrated that I was unable to do even basic weaving despite having all the knowledge," Pankaj said. "I blamed the loom for my failure – the seating arrangement wasn't right, or I couldn't move, or the seat height was not OK and gave me back pain."

This experience, combined with a serious case of IKEA stubbornness, fueled a two-year quest by Pankaj to improve and modernize the loom. His work paralleled Right | The edge binding of the rug is made by hand.

IKEA's initiative to nurture India's 300-year-old craft of hand-weaving by creating consolidated weaving centres with fair wages, good working conditions and stable work. Pankaj quickly realized that the two missions were dependent on each other – better wages could only come from more efficient production, which a redesigned loom could make possible. Add to that the fact that new workers were rather uninspired to work on the existing loom because it was difficult to operate, especially for women, and Pankaj felt there was only one course of action.

"The Punja loom has to change," he recalls thinking. But it was easier said than done. There is no large-scale, professional industry for manufacturing handlooms, he explained. They're manually operated contraptions often pieced together as makeshift framing by local contractors in rural India. >>

Machine manufacturers weren’t interested in the project. So, to create a model himself, Pankaj traveled on bumpy, washed-out rural roads for hours visiting automobile repair shops for spare parts with the supplier’s civil and electrical engineers, often having to overcome language issues with different Indian dialects. On one visit, the local auto mechanic near the factory was unable to finish a task on time because he had no power for days.

“At every moment, I was on the verge of breaking down and thinking this wasn’t going to happen because of time constraints and resource scarcity,” he said. “But my manager told me, ‘Keep trying. I believe in you and your logic.’”

After many months, Pankaj, with support from fellow co-workers including manufacturing specialist Deep Saluja and quality developer Sabarinath P, created four small-scale models. One of these was fabricated and made into three prototype machines that would be tested by weavers for two months. Then his next hurdle: What if the weavers didn’t want to work on it?

At first they didn’t, he said. They hesitated to try this strange new “machine.” But slowly the perception changed.

“At every moment, I was on the verge of breaking down and thinking this wasn’t going to happen. But my manager told me, ‘Keep trying. I believe in your logic.’”

Pankaj Date

Weavers were happy to work on it and said they felt less tired at the end of the day. With higher comfort came a feeling of pride and prestige. The redesigned loom also doubled production.

Today, nearly 600 of the new punja looms are being used in India and Bangladesh, enabling the weaving centres to hire more people, including a high percentage of women. By 2017, 3,500 looms will be in operation and the benefits will be felt by many more weavers in more communities. In fact, the impact could get even bigger – IKEA made the decision to not patent protect the loom so it would be available for others in the rug industry to use.

Pankaj feels a big sense of satisfaction that he played a role in preserving and developing the craft of hand-weaving, making a positive impact on people’s livelihoods, and creating a sustainable solution for IKEA...

...and that he is finally able to weave on a punja loom. ■

Above | This is the Punja, which in Hindi means hand. A traditional tool to stomp down the wheft. Sometimes still used, but now only to do small adjustments.

Below | A woman weaver working on the new Punja loom.

Above | The rugs have been burnt, washed, dried and stretched before the workers are able to roll them up.

Right | After the rugs are washed they’re hung out to dry in the sun.

Above | A shining example of great packaging. GLIMMA tea candles were previously sold loose in a bag. The new “brick philosophy” packaging saves time, money and transport – and they’re easier for you to carry, and to store at home.

The IKEA flat pack was introduced back in 1956 when a co-worker designer took the leg off a table to make it fit in his car. That was the beginning of our celebrated and – let’s be honest – sometimes complained about flat packs. The revolutionary flat pack became a reflection of our unique way of thinking and doing, driven by a passion to always improve, as well as a whole lot of stubbornness.

Thinking inside the box

Since the first flats packs came out of IKEA in the late 1950s, our packaging methods have been constantly challenged, reconsidered and developed to secure the lowest price possible, and make customer handling as smooth and easy as possible. The magic is in the details.

Our packaging philosophy relies on – or is wrapped into – a few principles: focus on the customer; packaging as part of the product; optimize cost throughout the value chain; the health and safety of our co-workers and customers; positioning the IKEA brand; and having a positive impact on people and the planet.

But how does it happen? You would be forgiven for thinking that we simply squeeze products into the smallest and flattest package possible. Not quite. The best packaging solutions are integrated into the product development process, resulting in flatter packs and even more affordable prices. Maximal usage and minimal waste is always what we’re striving for – in the actual packaging, but also in the loading of each pallet, each container and each shipment. It’s all one gigantic puzzle that needs to fit together. What we at IKEA dislike more than anything else is shipping air.

Over the years we’ve come up with some revolutionary solutions, but there’s also been setbacks and failures. “Only the one who sleeps makes no mistakes,” says the founder of IKEA, Ingvar Kamprad. GLIMMA is a shining example of great packaging. These small and popular tea-lights were previously sold as 100 loose candles packed in a plastic bag.

Since then, we have improved the packaging step by step, saving space on our pallets and hence becoming more sustainable, and at the same time protecting the candles to ensure they reach our stores in good shape. The new and improved packaging saves 30-45 minutes per day in store handling, we can fit 108 more packages on each pallet and – listen to this – because of the large volumes we move of this product, approximately 400 fewer trucks will hit the roads with GLIMMA.

JOKKMOKK is another example of good packaging – but maybe a little too good. It seems that some people had a hard time grasping the fact that we squeezed one table and four chairs into the same flat pack. This great packaging solution became a communication challenge in our stores.

Above | Packaging is as important to us as the products that go inside. Allan Dickné, Deputy Packaging Development Manager, is in charge of maximizing usage and minimizing waste, every step of the way.

But with EKTORP, we got it right. EKTORP was the first sofa that came knocked-down and flat-packed, which has been a huge improvement for customers because it means they can bring it home by themselves. And as a result, the majority of sofas and armchairs today are flat packaged – and this will only increase.

And that’s not all. We have stopped using expanded polystyrene in our flat packaging and replaced it with paper-based materials. We also recycle the stretch film used around our pallets, using it as a raw material for some of our products.

We constantly work to minimize the use of packaging materials and maximize the efficiency of our transportation – so we ship as little empty air as possible. The reason for all of this? We want to have a positive impact on people and the planet, which includes taking a lead in turning packaging waste into resources, and maximizing the use of renewable and recycled packaging materials. That’s at the heart of every IKEA packaging solution. ■

A refreshing start

Being ready for the day ahead starts with a good night's sleep in a bed that's completely comfortable for you. That just-right firmness in the mattress and pillow, and just-right warmth of the duvet. Choose yours to wake up just right.

Tammy
Sales Responsible, Sweden

You probably know already that we have mattresses. You might not know that we design them with the IKEA idea of 'complete comfort' in mind. So that your mattress combines perfectly with the pillows, duvet, protector, pad and even the bed base to bring you a really good night's sleep.

From the comfort of home

You can explore the IKEA range without leaving your home. At IKEA.ca there are lots of how to/DIY tips and inspiration to get your creative juices flowing. There are also tools to help you plan your home furnishing in the best way. Order your products online and have them delivered right to your door or to one of our Pick-up and Order Points.

Shopping on the go

If you have a tablet or a smartphone, you can soak up IKEA inspiration even on your morning commute – or wherever else you roam. The IKEA Catalogue app goes deeper into many ideas for every type of room, while the IKEA Store app can help to make shopping in person even quicker and easier.

Great ideas are all around

Inspiration can come from almost anywhere. The IKEA Catalogue app, brochures, magazines, social media, blogs, your friends and family – they can all help you to pinpoint the looks, the features and the materials that you'll love to live with. That saves you time when you start shopping because you have a better idea of what you're looking for.

The touch test

At your local store you can finally get hands-on with the home furnishings. You can size-up the sofas, compare the kitchens and peruse the price tags for as much time as you want. For up-to-date product and store information while you're there, you can check the IKEA Store app on your smartphone or ask a friendly co-worker.

You have great taste

Want time with a coffee to think about your home furnishing? Did you work up an appetite as you explored our room ideas? Your local IKEA Restaurant is the perfect place for a break – before, during or after your shop. Here you can refresh yourself from a wide menu of tasty food at inviting prices, all in a laid-back atmosphere.

Bringing it all home

When you shop in person at your local store, you can take home your new purchases and start to enjoy them the same day. Just remember first to check where you can pick up your items in the Market Hall or Self-serve furniture area. Or, you can call on our optional services for an even easier way to shop.

Secure it!

Creating safer homes together

We all want our homes to be a safe place.
When we work together, we can reduce the risk of accidents.

When it comes to our homes, safety is paramount. That's why IKEA has created products with a focus on both safety and quality. By working together, we can help prevent accidents and make every home a safer place for our children.

Some helpful tips for a safer home:

- 1 Furniture with included restraints must be secured to the wall according to product assembly instructions.
- 2 Always place heavy objects in the lowest drawers.
- 3 Remember to never put a TV or other heavy objects on top of a chest of drawers or any furniture not intended for use with a TV.
- 4 Never let children climb or hang on drawers, doors or shelves.

To request your own Secure it! Safety Kit, please go to your local IKEA store's Returns and Exchanges Department, call 1 (866) 866-4532 or visit IKEA.ca/SaferHomesTogether

Return policy – 45 days to change your mind*

Changed your mind or are not satisfied with your purchase? Simply return the unused item within 45 days for an exchange or refund. A receipt and the original packaging are required for all returns and exchanges. Refunds will be issued in the same method of payment as the original payment (credit card purchases will be credited to the original credit card account).

- We do not accept returns on:
- Used/washed bedding (all bed linens, duvets, pillows and pillow-tops)
 - Any mattress or stuffed/upholstered product without a law label
 - Cut fabrics
 - Custom countertops
 - Any product that has been modified/altered/washed
 - AS-IS products
 - IKEA gift cards

At any time, your local IKEA store reserves the right to refuse a return or exchange. Government photo ID may be required. Please see your local store for complete details. Services performed such as Delivery, Assembly, and Installation are not refundable. For online orders, IKEA will not assume transport charges for any items returned, unless specifically agreed upon beforehand for products purchased online.

Mattress returns policy*

It is important to us that you love your new mattress. So, if after a few weeks you discover that it is too firm, too soft, or too something else - just bring it back with your original receipt within 90 days and we will exchange it for one that suits you better. And there's no rush. You have 90 days to sleep on it! Please note that we are unable to exchange your mattress if the merchandise is found to be dirty, stained, damaged, or abused. Please see in-store for details. When you've found the perfect match, you can sleep easy with a free 25-year warranty.

Cancellation policy*

We can't cancel orders for made-to-specification countertops after they've been confirmed.

*This policy is in addition to your statutory rights.

Unlocking opportunities for kids through play

▼ Dive deeper into our features by downloading the IKEA Catalogue app.

The genuine glee on a kid's face when they play with a great toy – one that captures the imagination and sparks creativity – is universal. Rich or poor, northern hemisphere or southern, a great toy opens up the mind and heart. And it's why play is being used in places like the Comoros islands as a safe and powerful way to teach kids the skills that prepare them for school – and beyond.

The Comoros is an archipelago nation in the Mozambique Channel that few have heard of. The islands are naturally breathtaking, yet it's one of the poorest countries in Africa. Here, toys are resources that simply aren't available for all children as they are in wealthier nations. But with the help of IKEA Foundation and UNICEF, kids here and in emergency settings around the globe are playing their way to becoming capable and confident individuals thanks to Early Childhood Development (ECD) kits.

The size of a large suitcase, the 159 UNICEF ECD kits in the Comoros are colourful and exciting treasure boxes that include IKEA toys carefully selected by UNICEF to teach vital life skills to kids between the ages of three and six. It's an important age for learning the cognitive and social skills that will help them succeed in school.

"Play is the easiest way to stimulate this kind of learning and development," says Julika Riegler, IKEA Foundation's communications liaison with UNICEF. "It's how a human develops. We learn through touching things, interacting with our peers, identifying things with our eyes, recognizing colours and counting."

The IKEA Foundation-donated toys in the kits are timeless, the kind that even our grandparents might remember having. Hand puppets that teach kids how to communicate with peers and express themselves; shape sorters that teach fine-motor skills and cooperation; and coloured paper and scissors that stimulate creativity. >>

The Kit

The kit is made up of 43 items that include toys and hygiene products.

Project in numbers

- IKEA Foundation has donated eight IKEA toys for 12,000 ECD kits
- More than 1.2 million children will benefit from the ECD kits with IKEA toys
- More than 7,000 children are benefitting from ECD kits in Comoros

The ECD kits are the brainchild of UNICEF, as part of their effort to make early childhood education, stimulation and growth a right for all children. It's a goal that IKEA Foundation shares, which is why they were happy to donate enough IKEA toys to eventually reach more than 1.2 million kids.

The kits are used in conflict areas like Syria and Lebanon, and places like the Comoros that lack the structure and resources to educate kids in ways that encourage emotional learning, creativity, as well as develop their cognitive and motor skills.

"Teachers now have the tools that help them engage nursery school children in a more active way," says Miriam Mareso, the Chief of Education for UNICEF Comoros. "The toys help to enable learning through creativity and the interaction between children. These are important factors that help prepare children for what they will experience in primary school."

Working with the local government in the Comoros, UNICEF introduced the ECD kits along with a training program to guide teachers on how to teach through play – and the results are pretty touching.

"The kids are very happy and they play a lot so everyone is running to be the first to take the kits," says Hadidja Youssoufi Chanfi, a nursery school teacher at Vouvouni Primary School, just outside of the capital of Moroni. "Everyone is saying: 'this is for me' and 'this is for me.' And it makes them very active and more participative."

Parents have also noticed the way this new approach to learning has excited, motivated and energized their children.

Left | Teacher Hadidja Youssoufi Chanfi demonstrates to students how to role-play using IKEA hand puppets.

Below | Students at the Vouvouni Primary School play with colourful building blocks, characterful hand puppets, and a sort-and-stack set.

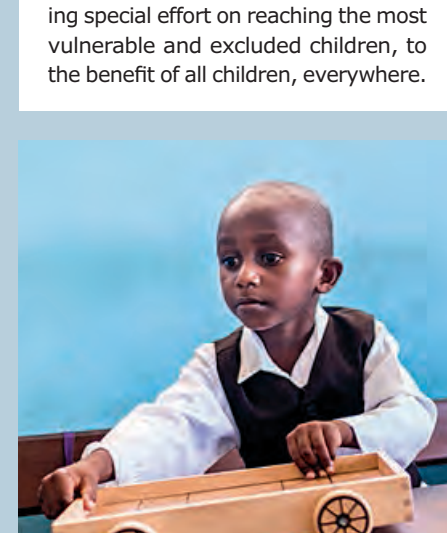

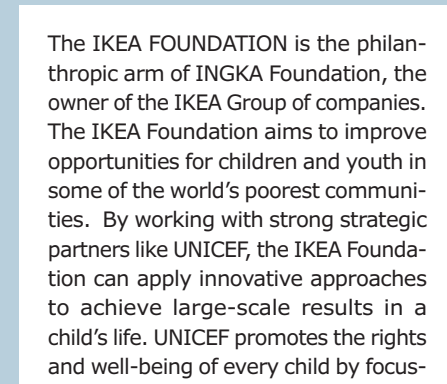

"I've seen a lot of change because he's repeating a lot of things on the blackboard at home that he learns in school," says Hadjira Hamidou, the mother of a four-year-old boy named Outhaimine at the Vouvouni Primary School. "He is drawing a moon and a sun the way the teacher is showing them. It gives him a good spirit."

UNICEF has already found that the kids who benefit from early childhood development programmes are more successful in school and have a lower drop-out rate, a particular problem in poor communities.

"Children identify school with fun and that keeps them in school," Julika says. "This is a way to unlock opportunities for kids to develop into young adults, who have the opportunity to study, start businesses, have an income, and support their own children and families later. That's the long-term growth that education and play can bring." ■

Above | A roll of paper is a blank canvas that allows the imagination to take over, while scissors help kids create all kinds of shapes out of coloured paper.

The IKEA FOUNDATION is the philanthropic arm of INGKA Foundation, the owner of the IKEA Group of companies. The IKEA Foundation aims to improve opportunities for children and youth in some of the world's poorest communities. By working with strong strategic partners like UNICEF, the IKEA Foundation can apply innovative approaches to achieve large-scale results in a child's life. UNICEF promotes the rights and well-being of every child by focusing special effort on reaching the most vulnerable and excluded children, to the benefit of all children, everywhere.

We’re for helping kids appreciate how nature nourishes

IKEA believes that children are the most important people in the world, and that’s why we’ll support childhood development across Canada.

We know that a strong connection with nature helps children to develop in a variety of important ways. So, on National Tree Day in September 2015, we worked with our long-standing partners Tree Canada to host well over 1000 school children across the country to get outside, explore their surroundings, be creative, and experience the wonder of nature.

IKEA Canada co-workers were on hand in each of the communities around our stores to help the students enjoy an eco-system scavenger hunt, play a “tree-via” game, create wooden medallion necklaces, and plant trees in clay pots to take home to nurture. In the future, IKEA Canada will continue to work with partners in our local communities to enable youth to experience the greatness of the great outdoors and understand how the natural world nourishes us.

Year Warranty

What is Warrantied?

The extent of the warranty given for each product is described alongside each product on pages 322-324.

Duration of Warranty

Each warranty lasts for the number of years stated against each product starting from the date of purchase.

What will IKEA do to correct the problem?

IKEA will examine the product and decide if it’s covered under this Warranty. IKEA will then, at its choice, either repair the defective product or replace it with the same or a comparable product. In these cases, IKEA will be responsible for the costs of repairs, spare parts, labour and travel for repair staff that IKEA incurs, provided that the product is accessible for repair without IKEA incurring additional expenditure to gain access. This will not apply in cases where repair work has not been authorized by IKEA. Any defective parts removed in the course of repair work will become the property of IKEA. If the item is no longer sold by IKEA, IKEA will provide an appropriate replacement. IKEA will decide at its discretion, what will constitute an appropriate replacement.

Conditions for the Warranties

The warranties are valid from the date of purchase at IKEA. The original purchase receipt is required as proof of purchase.

Exclusions

The warranties do not apply to products that have been stored or assembled incorrectly, used inappropriately, abused, misused, altered, or cleaned with wrong cleaning methods or wrong cleaning products. The warranties do not cover wear and tear, cuts or scratches, or damage caused by impacts or accidents. The warranties do not apply if products have been placed outdoors or in a humid environment or if the products have been used for non-domestic purposes (unless otherwise stated). The warranties do not cover consequential or incidental damages.

Care instructions

To be able to rely on this warranty you need to follow the specific care instructions for every product.
► You will find all care instructions in the IKEA stores and on the IKEA web site: www.IKEA.ca

General legal rights

This warranty gives you specific legal rights. This warranty does not, in any way, affect the rights given to you by law. You may also have other rights under applicable provincial/territorial law. IKEA is not responsible for incidental or consequential damages, or limitations within the warranties, so these exclusions or limitations may not apply to you.

How to reach us if you need service

Contact your local IKEA store. You will find the phone numbers on page 313 of this catalogue or at www.IKEA.ca. In the case of “for IKEA by Whirlpool” products, contact the service team at Whirlpool Customer Care Centre directly at 1-866-664-2449. Save your sales receipt as proof of purchase. Proof of purchase is required for the warranty to be valid.
► To find out more, pick up the warranty folders at your local store.

Special Information

This catalogue has been prepared by IKEA. Sources of supply and specifications are subject to change. Every reasonable effort will be made to ensure that all advertised merchandise is available in adequate supply. A high standard of accuracy has been sought in the preparation of this catalogue. Errors and omissions are always a possibility. Although IKEA cannot be held responsible, upon the discovery of any errors or omissions, all reasonable steps will be taken to inform IKEA Customers. Find more information at IKEA.ca.

Country of origin

For all of our products, we choose specialized manufacturers who can produce our components at the most economical prices. A single item may consist of several components from different countries. Country of origin information is available on each component when you pick it up.

Whirlpool Canada LP

(hereafter “Whirlpool”) will pay for Factory Specified Parts and repair labour to correct defects in materials or workmanship. Within the warranty period, the costs to remedy the fault e.g. repairs, parts, labour and travel will be covered, provided that the appliance is accessible for repair without special expenditure. Replaced parts become the property of IKEA. The exceptions are specified under the headline “What is not covered under this warranty?”

How long is the warranty valid?
This warranty is valid for five (5) years from the original date of purchase of the IKEA appliance from IKEA. If service work is carried out during the warranty period, this will not extend the warranty period for the appliance, or the new parts.

Which appliances are covered under this warranty?
The five (5) year warranty is valid for all IKEA appliances, except for LAGAN appliances, which have a 1 year warranty.

Who will execute the service?
Whirlpool, through its own service operations or authorized service partner, will at its sole discretion, either repair the defective product or replace it with the same or a comparable product. In these cases, Whirlpool will be responsible for the costs of repairs, spare parts, labour and travel for repair staff that Whirlpool incurs, provided that the product is accessible for repair without Whirlpool incurring additional expenditure to gain access. This will not apply in cases where repair work has not been authorized by Whirlpool (or its authorized service partner).

What is not covered under this warranty?
Service calls to correct the installation of your major appliance, to instruct you on how to use your major appliance, to replace or repair house fuses, or to correct house wiring or plumbing is not covered. Service calls to repair or replace appliance light bulbs, air filters or water filters. Consumable parts are excluded from warranty coverage. Repairs when your major appliance is used for other than normal, single-family household use or when it is used in a manner that is contrary to published user or operator instructions and/or installation instructions. Damage resulting from accident, alteration, misuse, abuse, fire, flood, acts of God, improper installation, installation not in accordance with electrical or plumbing codes, or use of consumables or cleaning products not approved for use. Cosmetic damage, including scratches, dents, chips or other damage to the finish of your major appliance, unless such damage results from defect in materials or workmanship and is reported within 30 days from the date of purchase. Any food loss due to refrigerator or freezer product failures. Costs associated with the removal from your home of your major appliance for repairs. This major appliance is designed to be repaired in the home and only in-home service is covered by this warranty. Repairs or parts or systems resulting from unauthorized modifications made to the appliance. Expenses for travel and transportation for product service if your major appliance is located in a remote area where service by an authorized servicer is not available. The removal and reinstallation of your major appliance if it is installed in an inaccessible location or is not installed in accordance with published installation instructions. Major appliances with original model/serial numbers that have been removed, altered or cannot be easily determined. This warranty is void if the factory applied serial number has been altered or removed from your major appliance. The cost of repair or replacement under these excluded circumstances shall be borne by the customer. Transportation damages are not covered under this warranty. If a customer transports the product to their home or other address themselves, IKEA is not liable for any damage that may occur during transport. However, in case of IKEA delivery of the product to the customer’s delivery address, then eventual damages to the product that occurs during this delivery will be covered by IKEA (but not under this warranty). For claims under this last particular condition the customer should contact the IKEA store where the original purchase was made.
